

The Solano County Free Library was originally built after a devastating fire in 1929 destroyed the library located in Armijo High School. The new building was dedicated on October 5, 1931 and served the general public as well as local school districts. At one time the library served 56 rural school districts. The Library was built using the Spanish Mission style in order to fit in with the Solano County Court House and Armijo High School located nearby.

When built, the Solano County Free Library included a school department section, a branch room for the County Library, a Fairfield Branch room, and the librarians' offices. The second floor was occupied by the Office of the Horticultural Commissioner, The Farm Adviser and the Home Demonstration Agent, all of whom were instrumental in lobbying for the construction of the new library.

We invite you to visit the elegantly restored historic "Old Solano County Library" located in the City of Fairfield. See how we can accommodate your event needs. It is a mixture of Spanish Mission architecture with modern building and technological upgrades.
